

Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of dental caries between children who had been exposed to fluoride varnish and those who had not. A total of 100 children aged 6-12 years were included in the study. The children were divided into two groups: 50 children who had been exposed to fluoride varnish and 50 children who had not. The prevalence of dental caries was determined by examining the children's teeth. The results showed that the prevalence of dental caries was significantly lower in the group that had been exposed to fluoride varnish compared to the group that had not.
