Gillot, 2013-03-14 The idea of writing this book was conceived when in the late 1960s I began teaching a senior undergraduate class in general entomology I soon realized that there was no suitable text for the class I intended to give The so called general or introductory texts reflected the traditional taxonomic approach to entomology and contained relatively little information on the physiology and ecology of insects This does not mean that there were no books containing such information There were several but these were so specialized and detailed that their use in an introductory class was limited I hold a strong belief that an undergraduate general entomology course should provide a balanced treatment of the subject Thus although some time should be devoted to taxonomy including identification best done in the laboratory using primarily material which students themselves have collected supplemented with specimens from the general collection appropriate time should be given also to discussion of the evolution development physiology and ecology of insects In the latter category I include the interactions between insects and Man because it is important to stress that these interactions follow normal ecological principles Naturally the format of this book reflects this belief The book has been arranged in four sections each of which necessarily overlaps with the others Diseases of the Intestines and Lower Alimentary Tract Anthony Bassler, 1920
