Gout and Pseudogout* Patrick Kimuyu,2018-01-29 Seminar paper from the year 2018 in the subject Medicine Epidemiology grade 1 Egerton University language English abstract Gout and pseudogout are believed to be the most prevalent crystal induced arthropathies in humans These disorders occur due to the deposition of crystals in the joints and soft tissues This results into periarticular and articular inflammation and injury Some of the most common crystals that are responsible for arthropathies such as gout and pseudogout include hydroxyapatite monosodium urate MSU calcium oxalate and calcium pyrophosphate dehydrate CPPD Rothschild 2014 In practice gout and pseudogout are relatively different despite the fact that they are crystal induced arthropathies and their difference can be explained by their definitions Gout is defined as a crystal deposition disease that is characterized by the precipitation and super saturation of monosodium urate MSU in tissues This deposition of monosodium urate crystals causes inflammation of the joints and soft tissues and this is attributable to tissue damage Therefore gout is characterized by sub acute or acute attacks of joints or the inflammation of soft tissues resulting from the deposition of monosodium urate The clinical course of gout involves an underlying metabolic aberrancy referred to as hyperuricemia which is defined as the serum urate level of more than 6.8 mg/dL Al Ashkar 2010 On the other hand pseudogout is defined as a clinical syndrome that resembles gout and it is caused by the deposition of calcium pyrophosphate dehydrate crystals in soft tissues and joints resulting into the inflammation and cartilage tissue damage Therefore the term pseudogout emanates from the nature of its clinical presentation in which acute attacks of the joints resembles those observed in gout Al Ashkar 2010 However it is worth noting that in pseudogout chondrocalcinosis is the most distinctive feature for the syndrome although some patients with chondrocalcinosis do not present with pseudogout This seminar paper focuses on gout and pseudogout Gout, Hyperuricemia, and Other Crystal-Associated Arthropathies V.
