Excerpt to witness the operations of the human imagination. It will be regarded by intelligent and judicious persons as a circumstance of importance in reference to the view now given of the transaction in which the witch of Endor acts the leading part that Hugh Farmer, beyond all question the most learned discreet and profound writer on such subjects is inclined to throw the weight of his authority in its favor. His ample and elaborate discussion of the question is to be seen in his work on Miracles chap iv sec li. Among the heathen nations of antiquity the art of divination consisted to a great degree in the magical use of mysterious charms. Many plants were considered as possessed of wonderful virtues and there was scarcely a limit to the supposed power of those persons who knew how to use and apply them skilfully. Virgil in his eighth eclogue thus speaks of this species of sorcery. These herbs did Maccris give to me And poisons pluckt at Pontus For there they grow and multiplie And do not so amongst us. With these she made herself become A wolfe and hid him in the wood. She fetcht up souls out of their toome. Removing corne from where it stood. In the fourth iEneid the lovesick Tynan queen is thus made to describe the magic which was then believed to be practised. Rejoice she said instructed from above My lover I shall gain or lose my love Nigh rising Atlas next the falling sun Long tracts of Ethiopian climates run There a Massylian priestess I have found Honored for age for magic arts renown'd Th' Hesperian temple was her trusted care Twas she supplied the wakeful dragon's fare She poppy seeds in honey taught to steep Reclaim'd his rage and sooth'd him into sleep She watch'd the golden fruit Her Catalogue of the Private Library of the Late John K. first impression was that the missing sheets were those which Gov Hutchinson did not recover after the stamp act riot of 1765 Finding the matter of the Appendix out of place suggested that the volume might have been carelessly arranged for binding On collating the manuscript the early portion was found in another part of the volume This was the copy used by the printers In my search I came to sheets which contained the subject matter of the printed text but expressed in different language I saw on a closer examination that this was an earlier draft and the identical manuscript which had passed the ordeal of the riot of 1765 for portions of it were much defaced and bore the marks of being trampled in the mud The copy from which the volume was printed was evidently prepared at a later date For the convenience of those who may hereafter consult this manuscript I made in folio 7 following the matter of the Appendix the following memoranda There has been an error in binding this manuscript The matter which precedes this is Appendix No 1 printed pp 449 481 edition 1767 and pp 404 423 edition 1795 The first portion of the history proper ending with manuscript page 28 to printed p 40 edition 1767 and p 43 edition 1795 has been placed in folios 92 100 Page 29 is opposite This is the manuscript from which the second volume was printed In folio 55 is the beginning of another manuscript an earlier draft from which the author prepared the narrative which appears in the printed volume The earlier draft ending in folio 91 carries the substance of the narrative to the word Boston on p 313 edition of 1767 and p 284 edition of 1795
