

How far can you measure?

VECTOR benefits from Leica Geosystems' proprietary know-how to measure great distances at amazingly low laser output power. How far you can actually measure in practice depends on a number of factors as illustrated in the diagram.

■ ■ ■ Distance measurement under ideal conditions

- Clear atmosphere, normal day or twilight
- Good reflectivity of target object (vertical, single wall)
- Target surface roughly perpendicular to laser beam
- Stable hold or support to ensure that the laser beam will not wobble or drift

■ ■ Distance measurement under average conditions

■ Distance measurement under poor conditions

- Snow, fog, rain, dust, high humidity level
- Small object (less can fit the whole emitting head)
- Difficult object (dark, curved, going up and/or a surface loss)

As the absolute reading mode only works as often as good view of the two eyes, there is no permanent update to obtain your field of view. If you need a permanent update you can order it as an option.

Operators find it easy to measure short distances by holding VECTOR in their hands. Ranges greater than 2 km may guide you to a real-time GPS speed.

A commercial 1.5 Ah battery (type 270) is sufficient for 1000 measurements. Actual operating mode are limited.
