

Chapter 23: Legal Implications in Nursing Practice Test Bank

MULTIPLE CHOICE

1. A newly hired experienced nurse is preparing to change a patient's abdominal dressing and hasn't done it before at this hospital. Which action by the nurse is best?

1. Ask another nurse to do it so the correct method can be viewed.
2. Check the policy and procedure manual for the agency's method.
3. Change the dressing using the method taught in nursing school.
4. Ask the patient how the dressing change has been recently done.

ANS: B

The Joint Commission requires accredited hospitals to have written nursing policies and procedures. These internal standards of care are specific and need to be accessible on all nursing units. For example, a policy/procedure outlining the steps to follow when changing a dressing or administering medication provides specific information about how nurses are to perform. The nurse being observed may not be doing the procedure according to the agency's policy or procedure. The procedure taught in nursing school may not be consistent with the policy or procedure for this agency. The patient is not responsible for maintaining the standards of practice. Patient input is important, but it's not what directs nursing practice.

DIF: Apply REF: 297 OBJ: List sources for standards of care for nurses. TOP: Planning MSC: Safe and Effective Care Environment

2. A new nurse notes that the health care unit keeps a listing of patient names in a closed book behind the front desk of the nursing station so patients can be located easily. What action is most appropriate for the nurse to take?

1. Move the book to the upper ledge of the nursing station for easier access.
2. Talk with the nurse manager about the listing being a violation of the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA).
3. Use the book as needed while keeping it away from individuals not involved in patient care.
4. Ask the nurse manager to move the book to a more secluded area.

ANS: C

The privacy section of the HIPAA provides standards regarding accountability in the health care setting. These rules include patient rights to consent to the use and disclosure of their protected health information, to inspect and copy their medical record, and to amend mistaken or incomplete information. This document limits who is able to access a patient's record. It establishes the basis for privacy and confidentiality about patients in any manner. The book is located where only staff would have access. It is not the responsibility of the new nurse to move items used by others on the patient unit. The listing is protected as long as it is used appropriately as needed to provide care. There is no need to move the book to a more secluded area.
