

Lab 20 – Using Microinformatics to Investigate Evolutionary Relationships: More a BLAST!

Introduction:

Genome-wide (GW) genomic studies using international consortia project genomes of the Human Genome Project, now also include and require 20,000 to 25,000 genes that define a human being. This project also systematically mapped the genomes of other species, including the fruit fly, mouse and Drosophila, etc. The genome and complete sequencing of the genomes of other species are available for genomic studies and to address and test concepts.

Why is this information important? Being able to identify the precise location and sequence of human genes and other genes from different species allows. In addition, finding other relationships of genes in other species helps in understanding evolutionary relationships among organisms. Many of our genes are identical or similar to those found in other species.

However, you already realize that it is impossible for a number of genes to be the same. So what other gene function information? Does it relate to other species? It should take you time to learn how to use the genome project to find the genes that are identical or similar to those in other species. This laboratory will provide you with the necessary information to do this.

Microinformatics is a field that includes statistics, mathematical modeling, and computer assisted analysis biological data. Using microinformatics methods, entire genomes can be quickly compared to find the genes that are identical and different. An extremely powerful microinformatics tool is BLAST, which stands for Basic Local Alignment Search Tool. Using BLAST, you can find a gene sequence in a database and find other genes that are identical or similar sequences to it in other species.

In this investigation, you will use BLAST to compare sequences and phylogenetic information to determine a phylogenetic or evolutionary relationship (also called evolutionary tree) in an evolutionary relationship (Figure 1). This is a phylogenetic relationship.

Note that the relationship is evolutionary, not phylogenetic. The relationship is evolutionary because it is a phylogenetic relationship. The relationship is evolutionary because it is a phylogenetic relationship. The relationship is evolutionary because it is a phylogenetic relationship.
