"I like the way he whistles and I like the way he walks. But honey, let me tell you that I LOVE the way he talks." This tender poem-turned-picture book about a child and the things she loves just begs to be read aloud. It may also inspire young readers to think about the things they love. Taking the book further, it serves as a springboard for class-generated lists and surveys on their favorite things, which makes for meaningful graphing activities.

Before Reading

The young narrator of Honey, I Love describes the things she loves, and one thing she doesn't (going to sleep!). Ask children if they think everyone loves the same things or different things. For example, do all kids love going in a sprinkler—a "flying pool" as the author calls it? Invite students to think of things they love as you read the book, and ways to find out the things others like or dislike.

After Reading

The cadence of this classic poem is mesmerizing. Explain that as readers, children will experience dialect in different stories and poems. Tell children that dialect is a particular way of talking that is used in certain regions of a country. Give examples of dialect they may have heard. Then explore further with these questions:

- ❶ Did the narrator choose the same words you would to describe things, or does she use language that is a little different?
- ❷ Why do you think the author chose to tell the story using a dialect?
- ❸ What is your favorite line from the story? (Then let children read it aloud to enjoy the poetic rhythm and share with the class.)
