Ho, Stephen W. Webb, 2006-10-07 CLIFFORD K HO AND STEPHEN W WEBB Sandia National Laboratories P O Box 5800 Albuquerque NM 87185 USA Gas and vapor transport in porous media occur in a number of important applications including drying of industrial and food products oil and gas exploration environmental remediation of contaminated sites and carbon sequestration Understanding the fundamental mechanisms and processes of gas and vapor transport in porous media allows models to be used to evaluate and optimize the performance and design of these systems In this book gas and vapor are distinguished by their available states at standard temperature and pressure 20 °C 101 kPa If the gas phase constituent can also exist as a liquid phase at standard temperature and pressure e.g. water ethanol toluene trichloroethylene it is considered a vapor If the gas phase constituent is non condensable at standard temperature and pressure e.g. oxygen carbon dioxide helium hydrogen propane it is considered a gas The distinction is important because different processes affect the transport and behavior of gases and vapors in porous media For example mechanisms specific to vapors include vapor pressure lowering and enhanced vapor diffusion which are caused by the presence of a liquid phase constituent interacting with its liquid phase in an unsaturated porous media In addition the heat pipe exploits isothermal latent heat exchange during evaporation and condensation to effectively transfer heat in designed and natural systems

Community Toxicity Testing John Cairns, 1986 Although community level toxicity testing is now being used for practical purposes it is not the intent of this book to espouse the use of community level testing in all situations or to replace single species tests that are the best source of information on growth reproductive success behavior and a variety of other end points On the other hand since field validation of laboratory predictions is becoming increasingly important and since community level testing offers the possibility of validation by using more comparable or identical end points in complex natural systems which is not possible for single species tests it is now worthy of attention by ASTM members Advances in Soil Science, 2013-03-07 The world population in 1930 was 2 billion It reached 3 billion in 1960 stands at 4.6 billion today and is expected to reach 6 billion by the end of the century The food and fiber needs of such a rapidly increasing population are enormous One of the most basic resources perhaps the most basic of all for meeting those needs is the Soil There is an urgent need to improve and protect this resource on which the future of mankind directly depends We must not only learn how to use the soil to furnish our immediate needs but also ensure that the ability of the soil to sustain food production in the future is unimpaired This is indeed a mammoth task a 1977 United Nations survey reported that almost one fifth of the world's cropland is now being steadily degraded. The diversity of soil makes it necessary for research to be conducted in many locations. There are basic principles, however, that are universal. This series, Advances in Soil Science, presents clear and concise reviews in all areas of soil science for everyone interested in this basic resource and man's influence on it. The purpose of the series is to provide a forum for leading scientists to analyze and summarize the available scientific information on a subject, assessing its importance and identifying additional research needs. But most importantly, the contributors will develop principles that have practical applications to both developing and developed agricultures.
