hypoxia is characterized by a variety of functional changes which collectively facilitate oxygen transport from the ambient medium to the cells of the body. All of these changes can be seen at one time or another in the course of hypoxic exposure. Yet as already stressed Hannon and Vogel 1977 an examination of the literature gives only a sketchy and often conflicting picture of the exact nature of these changes and how they interact as a function of exposure duration. This is partly because of the limited number of variables explored in a given study but it is also attributable to differences in experimental design differences among species in susceptibility to hypoxia nonstandardized experimental conditions lack of proper control of physical e.g. temperature and physiological variables e.g. body mass failure to take measurements at key periods of exposure and gaps in knowledge about some fundamental mechanisms. Furthermore the available data on animals native to high altitude are meager and/or inconclusive. Extensive further work under well controlled experimental conditions is required before a detailed picture can be made. Nevertheless it has been a guiding principle in the preparation of this monograph rather to summarize the vastly dispersed material that constitutes the comparative physiology of adaptation to high altitude into a coherent picture than to provide a comprehensive survey of the field. Consolidated Translation Survey, 1968
