 Leonard 2 13 Valentine s Day is here and romance is in the air On this day devoted to love couples date dance and dine some even decide to get married But we humans are not alone in our quest for that perfect someone Here are five animal species that spend their lives together Lovebirds The name says it all Lovebirds are some of the most romantic creatures in the animal kingdom When these adorable little parrots are ready to mate they begin by courting each other The female starts it off by ruffling her feathers and then the male responds nodding his head and doing a dance to charm her Lovebirds mate for life and for them the romance lasts They are known for cuddling and feeding each other and if separated from each other they will become depressed Butterfly Fish Beautiful elegant and oh so romantic butterfly fish lead solitary lives until they meet their one true love From the moment they couple up butterfly fish do everything together swimming and seeking food side by side If they happen to lose sight of each other they will take great risks to find one another again even swim up over the top of the reef 2 14 Seahorses It s hard to beat a seahorse when it comes to romance As lifelong partners pairs of seahorses begin each day of the mating season with a greeting dance They also become quite flirty holding tails bumping noses and changing colors to impress their mate And unlike most species the males help the females by carrying the fertilized eggs Shingle back skinks Beauty is in the eye of the beholder and these large awkward looking Australian lizards only have eyes for each other Shingle back skinks pair off with the same mate throughout their lives returning to find each other every mating season The male courts the female touching and licking her and follows along wherever she goes Beavers Beavers are one of the relatively few mammal species that are monogamous Well mostly While European beavers are forever faithful their American cousins are known to occasionally have a little fun on the side Still they stay together for all of their 10 to 15 year life spans Beavers are real Valentine s Day romantics too their mating season lasts from January to February
