Keys and Key Switches

There are two types of keys used in the aircraft. The key with the square head is used to operate the engine. The key with the round head is used to operate the fuel valve. Both keys can be inserted in the engine.

When you insert a key in the key switch, you will see a green light. This light indicates that the key is in the key switch. If you see a red light, this indicates that the key is not in the key switch. If you see a green light, this indicates that the key is in the key switch. If you see a red light, this indicates that the key is not in the key switch.

Ignition Switch Lock

The ignition switch is used to start the engine. It is located on the left side of the cockpit. When you turn the key, the engine will start. If you turn the key and the engine does not start, this indicates that there is a problem with the ignition system.

The ignition switch can be locked. To lock the ignition switch, you must turn the key to the 'LOCK' position. In the 'LOCK' position, the engine will not start. This is useful if you want to prevent someone else from starting the engine.

In the 'LOCK' position, the engine will not start. This is useful if you want to prevent someone else from starting the engine. When the engine has been started, the 'LOCK' position can be used to prevent the engine from being started again.
