Other studies on effect of social capital on trust in government have been inconclusive. For example, Putnam (1993) found that social capital is positively related to trust in government, while Fukuyama (1995) found that social capital is negatively related to trust in government. However, these studies did not consider the role of social capital in the context of trust in government. This study aims to fill this gap by examining the relationship between social capital and trust in government in the context of the 2008 U.S. presidential election.
