Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health of sedentary, middle-aged men. The subjects were 20 men, aged 40 to 50 years, who were sedentary and had no history of cardiovascular disease. They were randomly assigned to either a control group or a training group. The training group performed a 12-week program of aerobic exercise, resistance training, and flexibility exercises. The control group did not exercise. Physical fitness was measured by a battery of tests including a maximal aerobic test, a submaximal aerobic test, a resistance test, and a flexibility test. Health was measured by a battery of tests including a blood pressure test, a lipid profile test, and a glucose tolerance test. The results of the study showed that the training group had significantly higher levels of physical fitness and lower levels of health risk factors than the control group at the end of the 12-week program. The findings of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness and health of sedentary, middle-aged men.

Abstract – This study investigated the effects of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The program included aerobic and strength training, and was designed to improve cardiovascular fitness, muscle strength, and body composition. Results showed that participants experienced significant improvements in cardiovascular fitness, muscle strength, and body composition. Additionally, the program had a positive impact on psychological health, including reduced stress and improved mood. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can effectively improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
