

Social Concerns in the 1980s

continued study of social issues of work at the following table (this continues discussion of the 1970s)

A. Issues A study of work issues that occurred in the 1980s, which was based on research conducted by the National Commission on the Causes and Prevention of Job Injuries and Illnesses, found that the most common work-related issues in the 1980s were safety and health, discrimination, and harassment. Other issues that were found to be significant in the 1980s included job security, pay, and benefits. The study also found that the most common causes of job-related problems were lack of communication, lack of training, and lack of resources.	B. Research Research on the 1980s was conducted by a number of researchers, including the National Commission on the Causes and Prevention of Job Injuries and Illnesses, the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and the Occupational Safety and Health Administration. The research was conducted using a variety of methods, including surveys, interviews, and case studies.	C. Issues The 1980s were a time of significant change in the workplace, and this was reflected in the issues that were most common. Safety and health issues were still a major concern, but there was also a growing concern about discrimination and harassment. This was reflected in the research that was conducted in the 1980s, which found that these issues were becoming more and more prevalent in the workplace.
