Wells,2014-03-14 I SAW a gray haired man a figure of hale age sitting at a desk and writing He seemed to be in a room in a tower very high so that through the tall window on his left one perceived only distances a remote horizon of sea a headland and that vague haze and glitter in the sunset that many miles away marks a city All the appointments of this room were orderly and beautiful and in some subtle quality in this small difference and that new to me and strange They were in no fashion I could name and the simple costume the man wore suggested neither period nor country It might I thought be the Happy Future or Utopia or the Land of Simple Dreams an errant mote of memory Henry James s phrase and story of The Great Good Place twinkled across my mind and passed and left no light The man I saw wrote with a thing like a fountain pen a modern touch that prohibited any historical retrospection and as he finished each sheet writing in an easy flowing hand he added it to a growing pile upon a graceful little table under the window His last done sheets lay loose partly covering others that were clipped together into fascicles Clearly he was unaware of my presence and I stood waiting until his pen should come to a pause Old as he certainly was he wrote with a steady hand In the Days of the Comet (1906) H. Wells - In the Days of the Comet H.G. WELLS., 2017-02-06 Herbert George Wells was born on September 21st 1866 at Atlas House 46 High Street Bromley Kent He was the youngest of four siblings and his family affectionately knew him as Bertie The first few years of his childhood were spent fairly quietly and Wells didn't display much literary interest until in 1874 he accidentally broke his leg and was left to recover in bed largely entertained by the library books his father regularly brought him Through these Wells found he could escape the boredom and misery of his bed and convalescence by exploring the new worlds he encountered in these books From these humble beginnings began a career that was after several delays to be seen as one of the most brilliant of modern English writers Able to write comfortably in a number of genres he was especially applauded for his science fiction works such as The Time Machine and War of the Worlds but his forays into the social conditions of the times with classics such as Kipps were almost as commercially successful His short stories are miniature masterpieces many of which bring new and incredible ideas of science fiction to the edge of present day science fact Wells also received four nominations for the Nobel Prize in Literature Despite a strong and lasting second marriage his affairs with other women also brought the complications of fathering other children His writings and work against fascism as well as the promotion of socialism brought him into increasing doubts with and opposition to religion His writings on what the world could be in works such as A Modern Utopia are thought provoking

as well as being plausible especially when viewed from the distressing times they were written in His diabetic condition pushed him to create what is now the largest Diabetes charity in the United Kingdom Wells even found the time to run twice for Parliament It was a long distinguished and powerfully successful career by the time he died aged 79 on August 13th 1946
