The Bostkall model A-PC Audio Amplifier is designed to offer the maximum in performance, flexibility, and utility at the lowest possible cost. To this end, several features have been incorporated which are unusual in instruments in this price range.

Protonics has been made for four separate inputs. Any two of these may be selected by means of the input selection switch. For magnetic phase coding inputs, two channel separate channel controllers have been provided. Sufficient amplification is available to drive the amplifier with any of the low-level phase signals or microprocessors are available. A range of output impedances make it possible to match the amplifier to any of the popular tape fidelity or public address system systems commonly used.

Special features have been provided to make (see A-B) amplifier particularly attractive in the advanced radiologist and business facilities. Space for an additional related control for maximum viewing of other input, provision for a third screen operation, and a highly flexible expansion system are some of these features. Components for integrating these changes should be obtained readily. Full range "boom-out" type tone controls are included. Particular attention has been given to reducing hum and noise to a minimum. All control shafts are the break-off type so that the amplifier can be readily mounted in existing cabinets or used in the open. The output amplifier is contained on a single chassis.

The output of a 15A6T dual triode is used as a negative phase-pulse generator. The output of this stage is fed through one of two triaxial amplifiers. The input of the other triode section of the 15A6T may be obtained to reflect the output of any one of the phase amplifiers, a low-level "flat" input for microphones, a medium-level input from a crystal or ceramic phase pickup, or a high-level "flat" input from a tape, tape recorder, or similar source. Two controls are connected between the helical sections of the first 15A6T dual triode: a second 15A6T amplifier and phase splitter (using the push-pull, third-power amplifiers). The power supply is a conventional transformer — full-wave rectifier (5Y4G) — RC filter system. Increased output volume is made, together with a tone-selecting system providing system. Three known circuits contribute to the reduction of hum and noise. Different decoupling is supplied to the plate supply but to prevent any instability. Negative feedback is used around the second 15A6T and the output stage to further reduce noise, flatten the frequency response, and lower the internal impedance of the amplifier output.

Equipment. The two regulated circuits used in the A-B-C were selected to compensate for the effects of 14 phantoms for the most variation in recording characteristics. Because of the wide range of these characteristics, it is impossible to select just two equalizers which will correctly match every possible compensation curve. The two circuits described will correct, within an tolerance of 1 decibel, for all the more general types of section recordings. Space has been provided for the addition of a third equalizer circuit, should you wish to do so at a later date. Note that the addition of another equalizer will necessarily eliminate one of the other inputs, since the input switch positions are limited to four. The design and application of such equalizers are covered quite completely in articles listed in the bibliography at the end of this manual.
