some claim that people simply eat too much energy dense food while exercising too little The Neoliberal Diet argues that the issue is larger than individual lifestyle choices Since the 1980s the shift toward neoliberal regulation has enabled agribusiness multinationals to thrive by selling a combination of meat and highly processed foods loaded with refined flour and sugars a diet that originated in the United States Drawing on extensive empirical data Gerardo Otero identifies the socioeconomic and political forces that created this diet which has been exported around the globe at the expense of people's health Otero shows how state level actions particularly subsidies for big farms and agribusiness have ensured the dominance of processed foods and made fresh foods inaccessible to many Comparing agrifood performance across several nations including the NAFTA region and correlating food access to class inequality he convincingly demonstrates the structural character of food production and the effect of inequality on individual food choices Resolving the global obesity crisis Otero concludes lies not in blaming individuals but in creating state level programs to reduce inequality and make healthier food accessible to all

Historically research in low and middle income countries has been focused on what people consume with less attention to how and why people choose to consume the foods that they do. As incomes rise and local food environments undergo rapid changes providing consumers with a wider array of options at competitive prices, understanding the underlying drivers of food choice, including the preferences and values that underpin them, has become increasingly important. In recent years, there have been renewed efforts to understand the drivers of food choice in the context of changing food environments and broader food systems, and how these drivers link with food consumption. The goal of this Research Topic is to look beyond dietary consumption, what people eat, by considering more holistically the various drivers of food choice, how and why people eat the foods they do, to better understand what underpins individual decisions. Ultimately, by understanding why people make the choices they do, especially when situated in the local food environment and/or broader food system, we can identify important entry points for behavior change interventions, develop a better understanding about the role of food safety in food choice decisions, improve the environment, climate, and food systems through improved knowledge on the drivers of food choice, and learn about how changing livelihoods shifts dynamics related to food choice. Amongst other important research tied to drivers of food choice.
