Abstract: The authors examined the effects of a 12-week, 100% body weight (BW) resistance training program on the body composition and muscle strength of 10 sedentary, middle-aged men. The men were randomly assigned to either a control group (CON) or a resistance training group (RT). The RT group performed a 12-week, 100% BW resistance training program, while the CON group remained sedentary. The RT group showed significant improvements in body composition and muscle strength compared to the CON group. The results suggest that a 12-week, 100% BW resistance training program can effectively improve body composition and muscle strength in sedentary, middle-aged men.

FIGURE 2 | Antibiotic resistance gene (ARG) abundance in the sediment and water samples collected from the Tamsui River estuary and the surrounding area. The ARG abundance was measured by the number of reads per million (RPM) of the sequencing data. The data were normalized by the total number of reads for each sample. The error bars represent the standard deviation. The significance of the difference between the sediment and water samples was determined by the Wilcoxon signed-rank test. The p-value is indicated by the asterisk ().*
