Abstract

This paper reviews research on equity in mathematics education (excluding gender equity) for the period 2017–2022. From the publications identified, five themes were distilled: conceptualizations and framing of equity in mathematics education; research methodologies and researcher positionalities; equity-focused practices, pedagogies and teacher education; equitable mathematics curriculum content, access and pathways; and equity in mathematics education at system levels, nationally and internationally. The review concludes by engaging some of the critique and suggests future directions for research. The research demonstrates that there is growing voice and visibility of equity-focused studies in mathematics education and that conceptualizations of equity have broadened and deepened through an increasing diversity of studies in this area. At the same time, the review also shows the dominance of the Global North in shaping equity discourses and the paucity of research on equity in mathematics education from the Global South.

1 Introduction: Growing voice and visibility of equity in mathematics education

Many societies across the globe are growing increasingly diverse and unequal. Within and across countries, migration due to war, conflicts, climate change, poverty (to name a few), are shifting the nature of contemporary societies. Schools in general and mathematics classrooms in particular, reflect societal diversity and inequities as well as contain the possibilities to transform them. Providing access to quality mathematics education to learners from different cultural perspectives and knowledge backgrounds, diverse racial, ethnic, religious, linguistic, gender, socio-economic status and sexual orientations, is an important endeavor. Within this context, it is not surprising that there has been a growing focus on equity-related research in mathematics education practices, theories, curricula and policies.

In the past five years there have been a number of developments which collectively show this increase in research on equity in mathematics education. In 2022, the Journal for Research in Mathematics Education (JRME) published two special issues on this topic. In their editorial to the first issue, Crespo et al. (2022) show that equity-focused articles in JRME increased from 11% in 2013 to 22% in 2021 and argue that “equity-focused research in mathematics education is now closer to the mainstream of topics with which our field is concerned” (p. 88). In the second issue, a more diverse group of authors commented on the papers in the first issue, leading to a deepening of key concepts (Mathews et al., 2022). ZDM-Mathematics Education commissioning reviews in equity research highlights this growth. Two other leading international journals, Educational Studies in Mathematics and the Journal of Mathematics Teacher Education, have reflected in their editorials on their approaches to equity, and considered how to broaden representation from across the world: both in the national origins of authors and in the conceptualisations of mathematics education in their
