Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health of sedentary, middle-aged men. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The first session was a warm-up, the second was a cardiovascular workout, and the third was a strength training session. The program was designed to improve cardiovascular fitness, increase muscle strength, and reduce body fat. The results of the study showed that the program was effective in achieving these goals. The participants showed significant improvements in cardiovascular fitness, muscle strength, and body fat percentage. The program was well-tolerated and the participants reported feeling more energetic and healthy after the 12-week period.

What do you need to know about this? This is a common question asked by researchers. The answer is that you need to know the following:

Abstract – This study examined the effects of a 12-week, 100% bodyweight resistance training program on muscle strength, body composition, and metabolic health in sedentary adults. The program consisted of three sessions per week, focusing on compound movements such as squats, deadlifts, and lunges. Results showed significant improvements in muscle strength, lean body mass, and metabolic markers, including a decrease in blood glucose and an increase in insulin sensitivity. The findings suggest that a structured resistance training program can effectively improve physical and metabolic health in sedentary individuals.
