- Proper awareness begins when you are dispatched to a call.
- Look for information in the call notes that might raise a red flag, such as:
 - Reports of a loud party
 - Address is a known crack house
 - Address has previous underage drinking violations
- Trust your gut instinct.
- If you feel the scene is not safe request law enforcement personnel to secure it.
- Paramedics may be mistaken for law enforcement personnel.
- May lead to unintentional violence.
- Various types of body armor may be resistant to different things.
- Know what type of body armor your service provides.
- What caliber handgun is your vest effective against?
- What type of weapon is it not effective against?
- There are weapons available today that will penetrate some of the most resilient vests.
- Take the time to understand exactly what your body armor is designed to do.
- Local law enforcement agencies may be the best resource to answer your questions.
- Take time to ensure your body armor fits you properly.
- Body armor serves no purpose if not worn or worn improperly.
- Even with body armor on, you should not be entering areas that you would not normally enter without law enforcement.
- Always maintain a heightened sense of awareness.
- Identify potential indicators of violence
- Abnormal behavior, body positioning, or harsh language
- Do not develop tunnel vision
- Standard operating procedures
- Some agencies or regions have developed standard operating procedures (SOPs) for dealing with potentially violent incidents.
- Specific procedures for response to potentially violent incidents provide paramedics with specific steps to be taken at such scenes.
- Always use SOPs and policies as the basis for your approach to the scene or to patient care.
- SOPs and policies will not be able to cover every single possible scenario.
