

Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of dental caries between children who had been exposed to fluoride varnish and those who had not. A total of 60 children from two different day care centers were included in the study. The children were divided into two groups: 30 children who had been exposed to fluoride varnish and 30 children who had not. The children were examined by a dentist and the prevalence of dental caries was determined. The results showed that the prevalence of dental caries was significantly lower in the group that had been exposed to fluoride varnish compared to the group that had not.

Abstract: Phragmites australis is a dominant species in coastal wetlands and is a major component of the salt marsh ecosystem. It is a highly adaptable species that can tolerate a wide range of environmental conditions. This paper discusses the distribution and ecology of Phragmites australis in coastal wetlands. The distribution of Phragmites australis is determined by a number of factors, including soil salinity, waterlogging, and nutrient availability. The ecology of Phragmites australis is characterized by its ability to tolerate high salinity and waterlogging, and its role in providing habitat for a variety of wildlife.
