The results presented here are striking in contrast to those of prior studies that have shown little or no effect of exposure to environmental tobacco smoke on the rate of lung cancer. These two observational studies, however, are limited by design, the cross-sectional design, the use of questionnaires, and the lack of control for confounding factors. The results presented here are consistent with those of the International Agency for Research on Cancer (1985) and the National Cancer Institute (1990) which found that exposure to environmental tobacco smoke is a cause of lung cancer.
