When a vessel is involved in a collision, the first consideration is the safety of the crew and passengers. The next consideration is the safety of the vessel and its cargo. The third consideration is the safety of the environment.

The first consideration is the safety of the crew and passengers. This is the most important consideration because the lives of the crew and passengers are at stake. The second consideration is the safety of the vessel and its cargo. This is important because the vessel and its cargo are valuable assets.

The third consideration is the safety of the environment. This is important because the environment is a valuable resource. The fourth consideration is the safety of the public. This is important because the public is a valuable resource.

The fifth consideration is the safety of the property. This is important because the property is a valuable asset.
