

The background of the cover is a dark, textured grey. On the left side, there is a detailed illustration of a lightbulb. The base of the lightbulb is rendered with dark, swirling brushstrokes in shades of blue, purple, and black. The glass part of the bulb is transparent, revealing a yellow glow from within. From the top of the bulb, a large, vibrant splash of paint erupts. This splash is composed of various colors: bright yellow, orange, red, pink, and blue, all blending together in a dynamic, energetic fashion. The paint splashes extend across the upper and middle portions of the cover, creating a sense of movement and creativity.

Intended as a contribution to a better understanding of how universities create value in numerous areas, this book discusses the determinants of creativity and ways of stimulating it with a special focus on approaches and practical solutions relevant to teaching. Examples include problem-oriented student theses which represent a successful combination of creativity with practical knowledge. Based on the findings of international surveys of students, the author offers an in-depth analysis of the differences between what they expect from universities and the degree to which their expectations are met. Comparing students' opinions with those of employees of international corporations working graduates permitted the author to test the actual utility of selected aspects of university education. Regrettably, both groups of respondents gave low ratings to support for developing creativity, which should serve as a warning sign and inform future reforms at this level of education. This book is primarily targeted to those involved in education policy making and socio-economic development. It provides a rich source of information for university managers on how to better fulfil their missions based on the idea of co-creativity. It also suggests how to improve the effectiveness of research and education in order to ensure that both can better respond to current development challenges.
