Accommodations and Modifications in Timing and Scheduling

Timing and Scheduling

Support	About	Details	When, Why, & How?	IEP Write Up
Extended time	Some students benefit from longer time frames for assessments or tests. Specify what they need, although for state tests there is normally a fixed amount of extra time given.	Accommodation for classroom instruction and assessments. Cannot be embedded in state tests	Why? This is helpful for students with slower processing speeds, students who have test anxiety, and students with attentional challenges as it means they can have the time they need to show their strengths. When? Classroom instruction, activities, and assessments How? If a student has this on their IEP, you need to provide a quiet spot for them to work on tests after their peers are done!	Due to [socioemotional needs, attentional needs, processing needs], _____ benefits from extended time on activities and assessments including (unlimited, double, time and a half) on timed classroom assessments and (an extra day, up to an extra week, other) to complete classroom assignments
Flexibility in scheduling or change schedule or order of activities	When is it best for your student to take a test? If the answer is anything but, "any time," this is a helpful accommodation.	Accommodation for assessments. Cannot be embedded in state tests	Why? Some students start the day really strong but then fade during the day. If so, test them in the morning! Some students don't wake up fully until after lunch, so test them then! Some students have variable blood sugar levels and so you don't want to test them after a meal. Basically, if there is a time where students are likely to do better on a test, add this in and specify when! When? Assessments How? Figure out when a student is at their strongest and write that into the IEP! Why? Some students get overwhelmed or fatigued with long testing sessions. If so, they might benefit from being tested individually or in a small group and having the chunks broken up!	Due to [medical, attentional, socioemotional] needs, _____ benefits from flexibility in scheduling, including being able to take state assessments at times of day when he/she is strongest such as [the morning, in the afternoon, etc.]
Test administered over several days	If a student does best testing in small chunks, write this into the IEP so you can break up a test into smaller sections.	Accommodation for assessments. Cannot be embedded in state tests	When? Assessments How? This mostly applies to state testing. A student typically needs to be tested individually or in a small group for this and it just allows you to end the testing session when the student fatigues	Due to [attentional, learning, socioemotional] needs, _____ benefits from having longer test broken into multiple days as needed by the student.
