

backlash. When correctly adjusted there will be a slight drag when the gear is rotated through mid-position but gear will turn freely when it is off the mid-position.

OVERHAUL STANDARD GEAR

Overhaul procedure for steering gear units used on standard type tractors is similar to that outlined for units used on row crop types. Adjustments made after reassembly and reinstallation are as given under "Steering Gear Adjustments" for standard types in paragraphs 18 through 21.

STEERING LINKAGE

22. All standard (axle) models except the 55, 201, 202, and 203 are equipped with two tie rods. On early versions of the other models, the inner ends of the rods were attached to the central steering arm by ball cap type socket joints. The socket caps were provided with adjusting shims as shown schematically in Fig. MH108. The outer ends of the tie rods were attached to the knuckle arms by adjustable tubular socket type joints. To remove looseness at outer joints of the rods, turn adjusting plug in until tight, then back off one turn and re-install cotter pin. To remove looseness at inner joints, vary the number of shims under the caps.

23. On later versions of tractors equipped with two tie rods, the rods are provided with Thompson type rubber mounted ball joints at both ends.

Fig. MH108—Front wheel tie-in—on standard models.

This type joint (26—Fig. MH110) is non-adjustable.

24. On early production models 55, 201, 202 and 203, a single tie rod with clevis type ends is used. Excessive wear at rod ends is corrected on these models by renewing the worn parts. Drag link ends are of the ball and tubular socket type and are adjusted by turning adjusting plug in until tight then, backing it off one full turn. Later production tractors are provided with Thompson non-adjustable type rubber mounted ball joints at each end of the tie rod.

25. Toe-in on all models should be 3/16 to 1/8 inch as shown in Fig. MH108.

REBUSH STEERING KNUCKLES

26. The procedure for rebushing knuckles on standard (axle) type tractors is self-evident after examining the installation. Ends of new bushings should be flush with or just less than flush with machined surfaces on knuckle forging. Also make sure that grease holes in bushing are in register with feed passage in knuckle. Reface the thrust washer contacting faces of knuckles and axle if rough or grooved. Insert thrust washer spacers to obtain up and down play of .002-.004.

When rebushing Lemoine type knuckles, used on some models with adjustable front axles, it may be necessary to also renew the spindles (21—Fig. MH109), which performs the same function as the pivot or king pins on non-adjustable axles.

REBUSH AXLE PIVOT

27. Jack up front end of tractor to take weight off of front axle. Disconnect tie rod ends on center steering arm type linkage or drag link on others. Unbolt axle brace near pivot and raise tractor far enough to permit removal of axle and brace assembly. Remove bushings from axle main member and also from axle brace pivot bracket.

Renew bushings and reassemble parts in reverse order of removal, using new front and rear pivot pins if necessary.

ENGINE AND COMPONENTS

Due to the wide variety of makes and models of engines used in some tractor models, this section is arranged by engine make rather than by tractor models. If in doubt as to which tractor models carry which engine, refer to nameplate on tractor and engine or to the identification data printed at the beginning of this manual.
