

HOW ANIMALS SEE

Other Visions of Our World

This eagle owl has pulled a nictitating membrane over one eye. The membranes protect the eyes from excessive light during the day.

The iridescent eyes of the horse fly have thousands of individual lenses.

The red-eyed tree frog's eyes protrude from the sides of its head, giving it a very wide angle of vision.

The howler monkey of South America is the only nocturnal primate. Its eyes are so sensitive that if they are exposed to daylight for any appreciable time, the monkey will go blind.

The vine snake has grooves in its head extending from its eyes to its mouth and improving its binocular vision.
