How do you write so quickly? I find it takes me a dozen or more hours to write anything as thorough as one of your blog posts. (It's possible that I'm just unusually slow).

I guess I don't really understand why it takes so many people so long to write. They seem to be able to talk instantaneously, and writing isn't that different from speech. Why can't they just say what they want to say, but instead of speaking it aloud, write it down?

The Possibility of Inquiry Gail Fine, 2014-03-27 Gail Fine presents an original interpretation of a compelling puzzle in ancient philosophy Meno's Paradox which is first formulated in Plato's Meno challenges the very possibility of inquiry Plato replies with the theory of recollection according to which we all had prenatal knowledge of some range of things and what we call inquiry involves recollecting what we previously knew he also illustrates this with his famous cross examination of an untutored slave about a geometry problem whose solution the slave is able to discover through inquiry Hence contrary to the paradox inquiry is possible after all Plato is not the only philosopher to grapple with Meno's Paradox so too do Aristotle the Epicureans the Stoics and Sextus How do their various replies compare with one another and with Plato's How good are any of their replies In a fascinating fragment preserved in Damascius Commentary on the Phaedo Plutarch briefly considers these questions though for obvious chronological reasons he doesn't discuss Sextus But Fine's book is the first full length systematic treatment of the paradox and responses to it Among the topics discussed are the nature of knowledge how knowledge differs from mere true belief the nature of inquiry varieties of innatism concepts and meaning the scope and limits of experience The Possibility of Inquiry will be of interest to anyone interested in ancient epistemology in ancient philosophy or in epistemology
