ARCHITECTURAL STYLE

Shingle

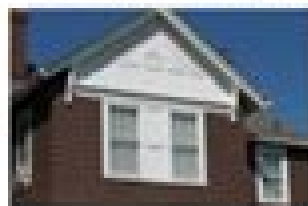

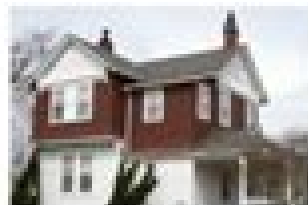

- Well-crafted, asymmetrical shingles, usually shingles on board shingles
- Asymmetrical facade with irregular, closely spaced windows
- Shingled walls without interruption of corners
- Increasingly wide gables and multi-level eaves
- Decorative porches

Shingle is an architectural style of the late eighteenth century, characterized by exterior walls covered with wood shingles, and heavy asymmetrical masonry. This style evolved greatly from a colonial interest in the shingled Colonial houses of coastal New England, where the greatest concentration of examples are found. Although a characteristic for large, country designed houses and hotels, it also has been used for smaller suburban buildings. Most examples were built in the 1830s.

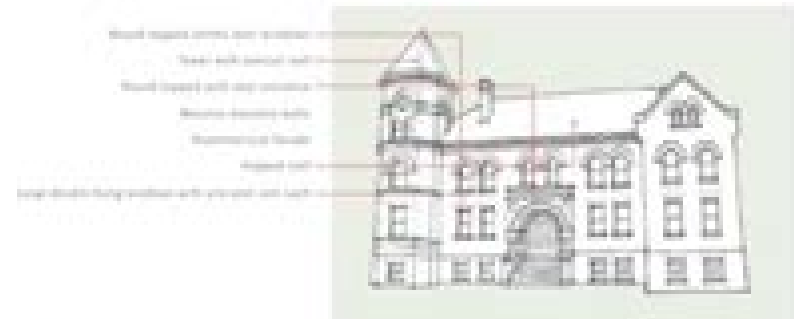

Identifying features include:

- Well-crafted and roof of asymmetrical shingles (shingled walls may occur on second floors only), original wooden siding may be replaced by asphalt shingles on most examples.
- Shingled walls without interruption at corners or corner boards
- Asymmetrical facade with irregular, closely spaced roof line
- Roofs with increasingly wide gables and multi-level eaves
- Decorative porches, though these may be small or absent in other examples

ARCHITECTURAL STYLE

Richardson Romanesque

- Block masses, towers, and turrets
- Towers with conical roofs
- Round towers with deep windows
- Decorative doorways
- Decorative windows
- High-set walls
- Large double-hung windows with grouped and tall

Richardson Romanesque is a style of masonry building largely based on the Romanesque style of Southern France, in the U.S., the style was championed by Henry Hobson Richardson (1818-85), an early 19th-century architect who was the first of the late Romanesque Revival, the style for his monumental Trinity Church in Boston. The Romanesque style became very popular for large public buildings during the 1880s, but he only completed only a few more houses in the style before his death. In 1885, a comprehensive monograph on Richardson's life and work was published, which greatly increased interest in the style. Most domestic examples are an outgrowth of the trend and were built in the 1890s. Because they were often of solid masonry construction, Richardson Romanesque houses were much more expensive to build than were those in the Shingle style, which could be executed in wood for the masses. Such buildings are mostly architect-designed landmarks. Scattered examples occur throughout the country, but they are most frequent in the larger cities of the Northeastern states.

Identifying features include:

- Block-shaped walls, including open windows, porch supports, or screens
- Masonry walls, usually with rough-faced squared corners
- Towers, which are centrally placed with conical roofs
- Asymmetrical facade
- Shingled roof with wide overhanging eaves
- Large double-hung windows with one over one sash
