

Abstract

The Bostkall model A.P.C. Audio Amplifier is designed to offer the maximum in performance, flexibility, and utility at the lowest possible cost. To this end, several features have been incorporated which are unusual in instruments in this price range.

Protonics has been made for four separate inputs. Any two of these may be selected by means of the input selection switch. For magnetic phase coding inputs, two channel separate channel controllers have been provided. Sufficient amplification is available to drive the amplifier with any of the low-level phase signals or microprocessors are available. A range of output impedances make it possible to match the amplifier to any of the popular tape fidelity or public address system systems commonly used.

Special features have been provided to make the A-80 amplifier particularly attractive to the advanced radiologist and technologist. Space for an additional control control for maximum viewing of other input, provision for a third viewing aperture, and a highly flexible, easy-to-use, system are some of these features. Components for integrating these changes should be obtained readily. Full range "boom-out" type base controls are included. Particular attention has been given to reducing loss and noise to a minimum. All control shafts are the break-off type so that the amplifier can be readily mounted in existing cabinets or used in the open. The output amplifier is contained on a single chassis.

The output of a 15A6T dual triode is used as a negative phase-pulse generator. The output of this stage is fed through one of two triaxial amplifiers. The input of the other triode section of the 15A6T may be obtained to reflect the output of any one of the phase amplifiers, a low-level "flat" input for microphones, a medium-level input from a crystal or ceramic phase pickup, or a high-level "flat" input from a tape, tape recorder, or similar source. Two controls are connected between the helical sections of the first 15A6T dual triode: a second 15A6T amplifier and phase splitter (using the push-pull, third-power amplifiers). The power supply is an independent transformer — full-wave rectifier (15A6T) — 50 tubes apart. Increased power ratings are used, together with a bias-reducing filament prewarming system. Three known circuits contribute to the reduction of hum and noise. Different decoupling is supplied to the plate supply bus to prevent any instability. Negative feedback is used around the second 15A6T and the output stage to further reduce noise, flatten the frequency response, and lower the internal impedance of the amplifier output.

Experiment. The two equivalent circuits used in the A-B-C were selected to compensate in exactly 34 phases for the phase variation in recording thermocouples. Because of the wide range of these characteristics, it is impossible to select just two equivalent circuits which will exactly satisfy every possible compensation curve. The two circuits described will, however, within an tolerance of 10 minutes, fit all the more popular types of reaction recordings. Space has been provided for the addition of a third special equivalent circuit you want to do so at a later time. Note that the addition of another equivalent will automatically eliminate one of the other inputs, since the input switch positions are limited to four. The design and application of such equivalent circuits will be covered fully completely in articles to be published in the future.
