Encyclopedia Isidore Singer, 1901 Museographs Caron Caswell Lazar, 2012-08 Before the printing press introduced the notion of mass production to the Renaissance world the written word was one of spiritual significance and unfathomable mystique Sacred texts predominated and books were acceptable means of procuring religious thought As harbinger of the book the Illuminated Manuscript maintains a well respected place in literary and artistic history as well as in the record of human progress and creativity Museograph's Illuminated Manuscripts gives rare scholarly attention to these Judeo Christian Islamic and secular masterpieces From the Byzantine Period to the Renaissance it outlines the evolution of this textual art form Religious themes that were common to illuminated texts for over one thousand years became progressively outnumbered as literacy spread beyond the religious community Books were slowly evolving from status symbols to learning tools The decorative content of illuminations also advanced through history s course Virtually without border in the Byzantine Period manuscripts resonated and simplicity befitting religious ceremonies and houses of worship By the Romanesque Period the appearance of the Bestiary indicated that a shift was on the horizon The Winchester border with its heavy frame and ornate gold bars was wild with foliage and whimsical in its combination of human and bestial figures Illuminated design gone organic Illuminated Manuscripts is a sensory treasure of image and word Subjects within this monograph embody a rich interdisciplinary history and continue to grow alongside man as his understanding of what is beautiful deepens and his ability to express it is actualized

Antisemitic Hate Signs in Hebrew Illuminated Manuscripts from Medieval Germany

Ruth Mellinkoff, Universitah ha-’Ivrit bi-Yerushalayim. Merkaz le-omanut Yehudit, 1999 Rejects the widely held theory that medieval artists distorted the human faces in Hebrew illuminated manuscripts due to anti iconic attitudes of German Jewry Presents the hypothesis that the illustrations were done by Christian artists under the supervision of Jewish scribes and for Jewish patrons Concludes that artistic devices such as profile portrayal and animal features were antisemitic signs whereby the artists expressed hatred and denigration The animals chosen had negative connotations e g asses and pigs Another feature closed eyes suggested the blindness of the Jews Further human features were often distorted according to stereotypes beaked noses or deformed to the point of grotesque or demonic suggesting that Jews were less than human To the question of how the Jewish scribes and patrons overlooked such signs responds that the looking but not seeing phenomenon operated in the past as it does in the present
