

The background of the cover is a photograph of a person rappelling down a steep, reddish-brown rock face. The person is wearing a red helmet and a harness, and is holding a rope that extends from the top left. They are positioned in the lower center of the frame, looking down into a dark, cavernous opening. The rock face shows distinct horizontal geological layers. The overall lighting is dramatic, with the person's headlamp illuminating the immediate area around them.

19th century to the present The book relates how science first struggled to find a place in the school curriculum and recounts the many debates over the years about what that curriculum should be In fact many of what we consider modern ideas in science education are not new at all but can be traced to writings on education of one hundred years ago The book is aimed at all those interested in science education classroom teachers and science education leaders concerned about the historical justification of the goals and strategies proposed for the field The book should be enjoyed not only by the researcher but also by anyone curious about just how curriculum is decided upon and implemented on a national scale This is without question the finest book of its kind on the market It deserves to be widely read by current and future science teachers supervisors science education faculty in colleges and universities curriculum developers and program officers in funding agencies The Science Teacher Adds a significant dimension to the history of American schooling and curriculum History of Education Quarterly
