Homegirls in the Public Sphere Marie Miranda, 2003-12-01 Girls in gangs are usually treated as objects of public criticism and rejection Seldom are they viewed as objects worthy of understanding and even more rarely are they allowed to be active subjects who craft their own public persona which is what makes this work unique In this book Marie Keta Miranda presents the results of an ethnographic collaboration with Chicana gang members in which they contest popular and academic representations of Chicana youth and also construct their own narratives of self identity through a documentary film It's a Homie Thang In telling the story of her research in the Fruitvale community of Oakland California Miranda honestly reveals how even a sympathetic ethnographer from the same ethnic group can objectify the subjects of her study She recounts how her project evolved into a study of representation and its effects in the public sphere as the young women spoke out about how public images of their lives rarely come close to the reality As Miranda describes how she listened to the gang members and collaborated in the production of their documentary she sheds new light on the politics of representation and ethnography on how inner city adolescent Chicanas present themselves to various publics and on how Chicana gangs actually function

Not Your Ordinary Group Home Girl C. C. C., 2013-01-17 As the years had gone by I had started to reflect on my life and how far I had come from foster care to being in group home after group home my entire life to this point in my life and felt it was best to leave those who meant me no good in the past However sometimes the past just doesn't want to let you go I went through so much growing up and even in my adult life I actually spent the majority of my life in group homes from the ages of 12 to 22 So I feel that a lot of my growing has come from being raised by staff members group home supervisors neighborhood people and the group home girls I lived with It was a struggle but being in those group homes made me who I am today and I can't complain due to how I turned out So I figured I'd write my thoughts my vision my struggles my trials and tribulations down on a piece of paper and share my life with the world as being not Your Ordinary Group Home Girl
