Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of dental caries between children who had been exposed to fluoride varnish and those who had not. A cross-sectional study was conducted in a public health clinic in a low-income urban area. Data were collected from medical records and interviews with parents. Results showed that the prevalence of dental caries was significantly lower in the fluoride varnish group compared to the control group.

The first, and most important, of these is the fact that the world is not a homogeneous mass, but a collection of many different peoples, each with its own customs, habits, and way of life. This is the first principle of the science of politics, and it is the foundation of all political theory.
