loss The condition is named after Dr Burrill Crohn who along with his colleagues first described it in 1932 Crohn's disease affects people of all ages but it is most commonly diagnosed in individuals between the ages of 15 and 35 The cause of Crohn's disease is not entirely understood but it is thought to result from a combination of genetic environmental and immune system factors Genetic predisposition plays a significant role as individuals with a family history of Crohn's disease are more likely to develop it Environmental triggers such as diet infections and stress may also contribute to the onset or worsening of the disease Additionally the immune system's abnormal response to the presence of normal gut bacteria is believed to be a key factor in the disease's development The prevalence of Crohn's disease varies across different populations with higher rates observed in developed countries particularly in North America and Europe The incidence of Crohn's disease has been increasing over the past few decades although the reasons for this rise remain unclear It is also more common among individuals of Ashkenazi Jewish descent suggesting a potential genetic component Inflammatory Bowel Disease M.
