Health Literacy Competencies Professionals Delphi:

Health Literacy Competencies For Health Professionals Martine Andrews, 2015-12-08 The purpose of this modified Delphi study was to obtain consensus from health literacy experts on the essential health literacy competencies for health professionals The competencies agreed upon by health literacy experts could serve as a foundation to create and evaluate health literacy curricula for health professionals Reports in the literature indicate that health professionals are ill prepared to mitigate the consequences of limited health literacy for at risk populations Most prelicensing curricula of health professionals do not cover health literacy Agreeing on core competencies is the first step in curriculum design Two rounds of a modified Delphi approach included 20 expert panelists in health literacy that reviewed the potential literacy competencies presented At the end of Round 2 the panelists had rated 105 statements reached consensus on 64 competencies 67% and failed to reach consensus on 41 competencies 43% Health Literacy Competencies for Registered Nurses: an E-Delphi Study Coleen E. Toronto, 2016 In the United States only 12% of adults possess proficient health literacy skills Individuals with low health literacy skills experience poorer health outcomes Failure of registered nurses to consider health literacy in communication with patients can significantly affect an individual's ability to understand and therefore follow health advice The Institute of Medicine's IOM Health Literacy A Prescription to End Confusion 2004 landmark report recommends that health professionals be trained to effectively communicate with patients with limited health literacy There is an absence of nurse competencies that explicitly address the needs of patients with low health literacy Therefore the purpose of this study was to identify a set of core health literacy competencies for registered nurses in any work setting A three round e Delphi design was used to elicit essential health literacy competencies for registered nurses with a national group of nurse health literacy experts n 41 Based on partial replication of prior work by Coleman Hudson and Maine 2013 a final list of 50 nursing health literacy core competencies were identified in round two Descriptive statistics were used to analyze data A competency that reached 90% agreement in round two was retained The remaining competencies were then prioritized in round three The final list of prioritized competencies generated in this study can provide a starting point for enhancement of health literacy educational content in practice and schools of nursing Handbook of Research on Interdisciplinary Studies on Healthcare, Culture, and the Environment Merviö, Mika Markus, 2022-02-18 As healthcare culture and the environment remain crucial aspects of modern society the current issues and opportunities within each sector must be examined and considered in order to ensure their success in the future These critical fields should be studied in relation to each other as they must work in tandem to create a better society The Handbook of Research on Interdisciplinary Studies on Healthcare Culture and the Environment presents innovative ideas and emerging research to highlight critical trends focusing on the relationship between healthcare environmental wellbeing and society and culture Covering a range of topics such as sustainability leadership and food security this reference work is ideal for industry professionals researchers academicians practitioners
