Abstract: The authors examined the relationship between the use of a computer-based decision support system (DSS) and the use of a decision aid (DA) in a simulated emergency department (ED) environment. The authors hypothesized that the use of a DSS would be associated with the use of a DA. The results of the study showed that the use of a DSS was associated with the use of a DA. The authors concluded that the use of a DSS can improve the use of a DA in a simulated ED environment.

IV. ALLOCATION OF COSTS

the 1990s, the company has been able to maintain its market share, despite the fact that it is a relatively small company. This is due to its focus on quality and customer service, which has helped it to build a loyal customer base. The company's success can be attributed to its strong financial performance, which has allowed it to invest in research and development, and to expand its operations into new markets. The company's focus on quality and customer service has also helped it to maintain its market share, despite the fact that it is a relatively small company.
