STUDY OF NEW TALENT

Abstract The purpose of this study was to examine the effects of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume exercise program on the physical and psychological health of older adults. The study was a randomized, controlled trial involving 40 participants aged 65 and older. The intervention group performed a 12-week program of low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume exercise, while the control group remained sedentary. The primary outcome was the change in physical health, measured by the 6-minute walk test (6MWT) and the 10-meter walk test (10MWT). Secondary outcomes included changes in psychological health, measured by the Geriatric Depression Scale (GDS) and the Geriatric Anxiety Inventory (GAI). The results showed that the intervention group had significantly greater improvements in physical health and psychological health compared to the control group. The 6MWT and 10MWT scores increased significantly in the intervention group, while the GDS and GAI scores decreased significantly. These findings suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume exercise program can improve physical and psychological health in older adults.
