1. "When you are conducting a post-mortem analysis of a security incident, and try to understand system management, what is the first thing you should do in the investigation process and why?" The first thing you should do is to review every security incident in the incident and all of the connected systems because you are looking for any system that should be the (former) user's responsibility.
2. "When an application administrator is asked and provides the log data, how does the log data help in the investigation of the incident and what steps follow?" The management is responsible for the generation steps and any additional evidence at that time. This shows the steps that incident response and forensic evidence can follow the management at a later time.
3. "When would you check the generated and system-related log background of your incident?" The management is likely to generate the evidence to understand each stage of the incident process. It is likely to generate the evidence to understand the incident and the incident response process.
4. "When would you check the log data of the system?" When the system is not working properly and the system is not working properly.
5. "What steps should be taken to help system handling process?" Preparation, Investigation, Identification, Documentation, Reporting, and Review. I would like to see the steps.
6. "What steps should be taken to ensure the incident response is completed, the investigation process?" There is no need to ensure the incident response is completed. If you know that there is something wrong in the system, there is no need to ensure the investigation process is not completed.
7. "Why do you want to have the incident response handled by the security incident response team and not the IT organization?" The IT team is responsible for the incident, monitoring, and responding to the incident response. The IT organization does not respond to the incident.
