Innovation Policy in a Knowledge-Based Economy Patrick Llerena, Mireille Matt, 2006-01-16 Patrick Llerena and Mireille Matt BETA Strasbourg E mail pllerena coumot u strasbg fr BETA Strasbourg E mail matt coumot u strasbg fr 0 1 Why Analyze Innovation Policies From a Knowledge Based Perspective It is broadly accepted that we have moved or are moving to a knowledge based economy characterized at least by two main features that knowledge is a major factor in economic growth and innovation processes are systemic by nature It is not surprising that this change in the economic paradigm requires new analytical foundations for innovation policies One of the purposes of this book is to make suggestions as to what they should include Underpinning all the chapters in this book is a conviction of the importance of dynamic and systemic approaches to innovation policy Nelson 1959 and Arrow 1962 saw innovation and the creation of new knowledge as the emergence and the diffusion of new information characterized essentially as a public good The more recent theoretical literature regarded the rationale for innovation policies as being to provide solutions to market failures Today however knowledge is seen as multidimensional tacit vs codified and open to interpretation Acknowledging that the creation coordination and diffusion of knowledge are dynamic and cumulative processes and that innovation processes result from the coordination of distributed knowledge renders the market failure view of innovation policies obsolete Innovation policies must be systemic and dynamic

The Cost of Not Educating the World's Poor Lynn Ilon, 2015-05-15 In The Cost of Not Educating the World's Poor Lynn Ilon observes from her 30 years of travel and work in some 20 developing countries how global instability problems of environmental degradation spread of global disease migration and political instability are a cost of viewing the uneducated poor as separated from a networked of fast growing global knowledge This book shows how powerful global learning systems are rapidly forming and linking the rich world with the world of the poor and developing nations Using a narrative voice interleaved with concise introductions to the underlying theories economics development learning technology and networks it shows us how changing our ways of thinking can lead to new possibilities The Cost of Not Educating the World's Poor is based on an emerging theory of development economics and the author's own vast experiences and stories It also discusses among other issues International development and how it has evolved toward an emphasis on knowledge How networked human capital creates new potential for poorly resourced countries The formation of a global system of learning networks The digitization of knowledge How nations improve their well being through knowledge and equity This interdisciplinary assessment of international learning inequality and the methods to overcome it will appeal to researchers concerned with emerging concepts of global learning networks and their effects on development It will also be of interest to students and policymakers studying national inequality economics and global development
