Abstract The purpose of this study was to examine the effects of a 12-week, 3-day-per-week, 30-min resistance training program on the body composition and muscle strength of 12 sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were randomly assigned to either a resistance training or control group. The resistance training group performed a circuit of 12 exercises, 3 times per week, for 12 weeks. The control group did not exercise. Body composition and muscle strength were measured at baseline and after 12 weeks. The resistance training group showed significant improvements in body composition and muscle strength compared to the control group. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, 3-day-per-week, 30-min resistance training program can improve body composition and muscle strength in sedentary, middle-aged women.

As noted earlier, the 1990s witnessed a dramatic rise in the number of U.S. firms operating in emerging markets. This rise was driven by a number of factors, including the increasing globalization of the economy, the need for U.S. firms to diversify their operations, and the growing importance of emerging markets as sources of raw materials and labor.
