Abstract After decades, Southern U.S. public high schools continue to have the lowest graduation rates. To be included in the 2011 state graduation accountability system, schools are required to achieve an 80% graduation rate by the end of 2015. To be able to meet this graduation requirement, schools must be able to provide a high-quality education to all students. This is not an insurmountable challenge because the graduation requirement is a goal, not a prescription. This research investigated successful graduation strategies used by the top 100 high schools in graduation rates (2010) and identified factors associated with successful graduation.
