

Governing by Network

A large triangular network diagram composed of smaller triangles and nodes. The diagram is a Sierpinski triangle, a fractal that is formed by recursively subdividing a triangle into four smaller triangles, removing the central one. In this version, the central triangle is not removed but is instead filled with the text 'The New Shape of the Public Sector'. The nodes are represented by small circles at the vertices of the triangles, and the edges are lines connecting them. The overall structure is a complex, interconnected web of nodes and lines, symbolizing a network-based approach to governance.

The End of Government... as We Know it: Making Public Policy Work Elaine Ciulla Kamarck, 2024-11-01 In the last decades of the 20th century many political leaders declared that government was in the words of Ronald Reagan the problem not the solution But on closer inspection argues Elaine Kamarck the revolt against government was and is a revolt against bureaucracy a revolt that has taken place in first world developing and avowedly communist countries alike To some this looks like the end of government Kamarck however counters that what we are seeing is the replacement of the traditional bureaucratic approach with new models more in keeping with the information age economy The End of Government explores the emerging contours of this new postbureaucratic state the sequel to government as we know it considering What forms will it take Will it work in all policy arenas Will it serve democratic ideals more effectively than did the bureaucratic state of the previous century Perhaps most significantly how will leadership be redefined in these new circumstances Kamarck's provocative work makes it clear that in addition to figuring out what to do today's government leaders face an unprecedented number of options when it comes to how to do things The challenge of government increasingly will be to choose an implementation mode match it to a policy problem and manage it well in the postbureaucratic world
