EDUCATING WITH GOLD

Abstract Thymus praecox L. and Thymus serpyllifolius L. were used as model species to study the effects of different levels of nitrogen and phosphorus fertilization on the growth and chemical composition of the plants. The results showed that the growth of both species was significantly affected by the levels of nitrogen and phosphorus fertilization. The chemical composition of the plants was also affected, with higher levels of nitrogen and phosphorus leading to higher concentrations of certain compounds. The results suggest that the growth and chemical composition of Thymus species can be manipulated by controlling the levels of nitrogen and phosphorus fertilization.
