CIRCUIT DESCRIPTION

General Information

The T951 Series Television Chassis are deluxe transformer-powered chassis which employ circuit board construction. These circuit boards are "road mapped" on both sides as an aid in locating components and test points during servicing. Some large components are mounted directly to the chassis pan. These chassis are designed for use with 90 degree deflection color picture tubes. Refer to the appropriate Instrument Service Manual (ISM) for the correct picture tube type.

Chassis Identification

These chassis are identified by a label located on the chassis. The first three numbers (T951) indicate the basic chassis series. The next two numbers indicate the chassis version within the series. The last two letters are used to indicate production changes. When ordering parts and requesting technical assistance or information, the complete chassis number must be supplied e.g., T951-01-AA.

Circuit Description

These chassis have a video bandpass of approximately 3.6MC at the 6 db level and operate at a picture carrier frequency of 45.75MC. Three stages of IF amplification are used to obtain the required gain and bandwidth. The input of the video IF section contains a tuned input coil and a 47.25MC trap. R201 and L201 form this trap. A portion of the transformer T204 is used in conjunction with R215 to provide trappage at 41.25MC. The 1st and 2nd video IF amplifier are series-connected. Thus, any AGC voltage applied to the first stage will effectively control the gain of both stages. At the plate of the 3rd IF amplifier the 41.25MC Sound Carrier and 45.75MC Video Carrier are coupled through the capacitor (C224) to the sound detector diode. The two signals combine to form a 4.5MC signal which is then coupled to the audio circuits.

The audio circuit contains a 6AU6 as the Sound IF Amplifier and a 6DT6 as the sound detector. On high-level signals the operation of the 6DT6 is similar to other type quadrature detectors. However, limiting is accomplished in a different manner. On high-level signals the control grid draws current which reduces the "Q" of the tuned circuit, thereby, causing limiting. An improvement in sensitivity on low signal levels is obtained by using the 6DT6. Circuit parameters are chosen so there is sufficient feedback from the quadrature grid to the control grid to sustain oscillation at 4.5MC.

The output of the 3rd video IF is coupled through the IF transformer to the video detector. A 4.5MC trap is included at this point to attenuate any 4.5MC signal which might be present.

The detected output is a video signal in which the sync tips are negative. This video signal is coupled to the grid of the pentode section of a 6MU8. This pentode section functions as a video amplifier for the chrominance information and as a sync amplifier and cathode follower for the luminance information. The triode section of the 6MU8 functions as an amplifier for the composite video signal. A vertical pulse is
