There are a few other things to be aware of when using the `get` method. First, the `get` method will only return the value of the property if the property exists. If the property does not exist, the `get` method will return `undefined`. Second, the `get` method will only return the value of the property if the property is not a function. If the property is a function, the `get` method will return the function itself. Third, the `get` method will only return the value of the property if the property is not a symbol. If the property is a symbol, the `get` method will return `undefined`. Finally, the `get` method will only return the value of the property if the property is not a `NaN` value. If the property is a `NaN` value, the `get` method will return `undefined`.
