¹² To address the issue, we estimated the model for each country separately. The results are available from the author upon request.

As noted earlier, the 1990s witnessed a significant increase in the number of people who were employed in the service sector. This was particularly true in the case of the United States, where the service sector accounted for more than 70% of the economy by the end of the decade. This trend was also reflected in the European Union, where the service sector accounted for more than 60% of the economy by the end of the decade. This shift towards the service sector was driven by a number of factors, including the increasing importance of services in the global economy, the growth of the information technology sector, and the decline of manufacturing and agriculture.
