¹² To address the issue, we estimated the model for each country separately. The results are available from the author upon request.

As noted earlier, the 1990s witnessed a dramatic rise in the number of U.S. firms operating in foreign markets. This rise was driven by a number of factors, including the globalization of markets, the increasing importance of exports, and the growing need for U.S. firms to compete in international markets. The rise in international trade and investment has led to a corresponding increase in the number of U.S. firms operating in foreign markets. This increase has been particularly pronounced in the case of large, multinational corporations, which have expanded their operations globally in order to take advantage of new markets and resources. The rise in international trade and investment has also led to a corresponding increase in the number of U.S. firms operating in foreign markets. This increase has been particularly pronounced in the case of large, multinational corporations, which have expanded their operations globally in order to take advantage of new markets and resources.
